On the Road

Jessica is a young woman.
She is very pretty.
She is blonde.
She lives in Oxford.
She works at Marks & Spencer.
She has got a new car.
It's a blue convertible.
She drives too fast.
A motorbike overtakes her.
It's a policeman.
He stops her.
She must show her driving licence.
"Sorry, my dear," the policeman says,
"I must give you a ticket."
Jessica looks at the ticket.
She isn't happy.
But she smiles at the policeman.
"100 pounds for speeding," Jessica says,
"that's a lot of money.
I'm just a poor shop assistant."
The policeman smiles, too.
"Well then, in this case it will be £99.95." (Say: ninety-nine pounds ninety-five)

Marks & Spencer is a popular department store in Britain.

A convertible is a kind of car in which you can fold away the roof.

A ticket is a fine.

A driver can drive behind another car.
Or he can overtake it.

She drives on the road.
The children play in the street.

Look for the driving license.
Look at the driving licence.

She also smiles. = She smiles, too.
She likes to drive a fast car. In front of a verb.
She drives too fast. In front of an adjective.

MAKE QUESTIONS:

She is a young woman. …Is she a young woman?.....

She is blonde. .....

She has got a new car. .....

It's a convertible. .....

He is a policeman. .....

She is happy. .....

I'm a shop assistant. .....

They are driving too fast. .....

I'm smiling at the policeman. .....